Lab #15: Daily Weather Station Models

Introduction: Station models are graphic representations of weather at a particular moment in time. The features of a station model always face in a clockwise manner. All of the data that you need to summarize is represented. If you were to look at a regional map, you could find a lot of information in order to make predictions. By looking at station models all across a map, you can identify fronts, trends, and cloud cover. You can also predict the likelihood and the type of precipitation. In this investigation, you will record weather data and organize it in a station model. The data will be collected over five consecutive days. After the data is retrieved, it will be evaluated.

Objective: To collect weather data and construct a station model and make predictions based on those models.
